EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Transportation Investment Generating Economic Recovery (TIGER) Discretionary Grant Program is funded by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA). A second round of TIGER funding was recently authorized by Congress - $600 million in funds for this fiscal year.

These competitive grants can be used to fund capital investment in transportation infrastructure projects. The projects must have a significant impact on the nation, a region, or a metropolitan area – and must create jobs. Sixty percent of the funding will go to economically distressed areas.

TIGER grants tackle the kind of major transportation projects that have been difficult to build under other funding programs. US DOT will give priority to projects that are expected to quickly create and preserve jobs and stimulate rapid increases in economic activity – the kinds of projects that will help spur economic growth, reduce gridlock, provide safe, affordable and environmentally sustainable transportation choices and create jobs.

Primary selection criteria include contributing to the long-term economic competitiveness, improving the condition of existing transportation facilities and systems, improving energy efficiency and reducing greenhouse gas emissions, improving the safety of U.S. transportation facilities and improving the quality of living and working environments of communities through increased transportation choices and connections.

The Wisconsin and Southern Railroad (WSOR) has packaged a multi-million dollar shovel-ready proposal that will create 200 local jobs over the next three years.

The physical presence of rails in Rock County, from the Janesville Yard to the Beloit Spur, represents future jobs. However, WSOR is running on track that is in need of being upgraded.
