Green Tips of the Week: Green Tips – Planning & Watering Your Garden: Planning a garden can be tricky, particularly if your space is limited. Try increasing your per-square-foot yield by planting efficiently. The "three sisters" scheme, based on Native American tradition, plants corn, squash, and beans together so that the trio has better growing structure. Also, choose plants that attract pollinators to help the birds and the bees, many of which are in serious decline.

To minimize your garden's water use, mulch with cocoa shells, bark, or other natural materials to reduce evaporation. (This also helps keep weeds down.) When you do need to sprinkle your crop, consider using greywater, installing a rain-collection system, try drip irrigation instead of a broadcasting sprinkler, and put water-delivery devices on a timer.

Community gardens can lighten the burden of maintaining a productive garden, making the growing of food a social activity. These cheerful operations also let people without much of their own space get their hands dirty in their own neighborhood. Programs such as Plant a Row for the Hungry and certain Second Harvest branches encourage gardeners to grow a little extra for local food banks and homeless shelters.
